Questions and Answers

Q: What inspired you to create The Junior Detectives series?

A: The Junior Detectives series was created during the first initial lock down of the pandemic in March 2020. I was unable to get my resources from my classroom. So, I created a series of stories every week to be able to read it to my students online. I wanted my students to feel some type of normalcy and still feel the connection in their learning.

Q: Why do you only is the side/ back profile of the main detective?

A: This was done so every child can imagine themselves as the lead detective guiding the Junior Detectives on their adventure. The lead detective can be any gender or race ethnicity.

Q: That is a great concept for the lead detective, where did the inspiration steam from?

A: As an educator I have over heard students tell one another that they can't be a character because of their gender or ethnicity. I wanted every child feel, comfortable in their own skin and feel that they have the leadership skills to do so.

Questions and Answers

Q: What made you decided to self publish?

A: I didn't want to pitch my idea to anyone, for I know my idea was solid. I can control what goes in my stories and what adventures I will create for The Junior Detectives. Also, I have heard some horror stories how ideas are stolen, and I didn't want that to be a possibility. I have a few friends who are self published authors as well and they gave me some guidance towards self publishing.

Q: Are there any authors that inspired to how you wrote you book?

A: I would have to say Robert Munch! I just remember as a child when my teachers/parents would read me his stories I was always locked in. For his style of writing was fun and really hit the true nature of a child's curiosity. When creating my stories, I imagined children feeling the same way. That they are part of the story that they are leaders to their own imagination.

Questions and Answers

Q: When you self publish do you do all the work?

A: No, there are a lot of behind the scenes that most are not aware of, my team of editors (Betty, Kelly) that helped me gracefully with my story to make sure that all proper grammar was used.

They also help me with some fun facts that I was not aware of to add to my story. FriesenPress is my publishing company they were very helpful from day one from the intake process (Christoph) to referring me my publicist (Rory). Rory helped me along the way and explained the publishing process was there when ever I had questions (which I had many). My illustrator (Anthony Santos) without him my story would have never come to life he was able to envision my ideas to how I wanted the lead detective to look like to each animal sleeping the winter away. To my marketing team (Natasha) she has guided me to not feel so overwhelmed when promoting my book, she has been a great help when bouncing ideas off and guiding me into the right direction. (The marketing piece can get very stressful). Without my team from FriesenPress all of this would have never been possible, and I will forever be grateful for the professional relationship that we have created.

Questions and Answers

Q: What age group is your book?

A: The level I have set it to is kindergarten- gr. 4.

Q: Are the topics to advance for kindergarten?

A: No, these are topics that I cover in my classroom, children at that age absorb so much information the brains are like sponges.

Q: Can you give us some easter eggs to what these adventures are about?

A: There is a hint now within the illustrations to what the next book/adventure will be.

Book Reviews

“Curious young investigators are invited to explore the world of butterflies in the second installment of Tomé’s Junior Detectives series.

For the readers—the Junior Detectives of the title—the adventure begins with gear, including a detective hat, a detective guide, a magnifying glass, and, last but not least, a map. The map will be especially useful, as in these pages they will be traveling by plane to a tropical forest to study butterflies in their natural habitat.”
